

WHO TALKS LIKE THAT???

FOR BROADCASTERS
AND PODCASTERS.

HOLLAND COOKE

Consultant, long-time Broadcaster, and, yes, long-ago English Teacher.

HOW SOUNDING HUMAN

MAKES EVERYTHING
YOU SAY MATTER MORE.

Common
misstatements that make listeners ignore you.

Radio and podcasts are intimate media. And unforgiving.

Mispronounce a word, misuse another, lapse into cliché or announcer-speak, and you've given them a reason to notice how you're talking, instead of what you're saying...or to just tune-out mentally.

I PROMISE: What follows is not intended to make you self-conscious. And if my take on this litany of examples seems picky-picky-picky, I'll take The Fifth. I'm all about helping you communicate clearly enough to compete with a historic number of audio choices, all chasing an increasingly scarce commodity: attention.

Broadcast-ese

“announced”

- Avoid: “The school board announced that classes will...”
- Instead: “Schools will close two hours early tomorrow.”
- Why: Tell me the news, not that somebody announced it.

Process-speak

- Avoid: “The Transit Board revised its fare structure.”
- Instead: “Riding the bus will cost 50 cents more starting Monday.”
- Why: Meetings are process. What changes for me is news.

Bureaucrat-speak

- Avoid: “The district reallocated Title I funds.”
- Instead: “Some after-school programs could be cut.”
- Why: Translate the paperwork into consequences.

“What say you?”

- Avoid: When posing a call-in topic.
- Instead: “How do YOU feel about [issue]?” Note: “Feel” instead of “think;” because you’re asking for opinions, not facts.
- Why: “What say you?” sounds like Tonto from the old “Lone Ranger” show.

“Those who...”

- Avoid: “Those who feel they were overcharged can...”
- Instead: “If you were overcharged, you can...”
- Why: “Those” talks about people. “You” talks to me.

“Is asked to...”

- Avoid: “Anyone who saw the accident is asked to call...”
- Instead: “If you saw this accident, call...”
- Why: Passive voice sounds stiff. Direct voice sounds human.

“The Traffic Leader”

- Avoid: Telling listeners what you claim to be.
- Instead: Tell them what they get.
- Why: “Leader” is about us. “Time-Saver Traffic” is about you.

Boasting

- Avoid: “The Station of Record...”
- Instead: Demonstrate what makes you useful.
- Why: Authority you award yourself isn’t very authoritative.

Say it shorter.

- Avoid: “Due to the fact that...”
- Instead: “Because...”
- Why: What you’re saying lands faster.

“contact”

- Avoid: “You are urged to contact the State Police.”
- Instead: “Call the State Police.”
- Why: Nobody ever ran in yelling, “Contact State Police!”

“Many of you”

- Avoid: Sounds like you’re talking to a crowd.
- Instead: “You...”
- Why: Radio and podcasting are intimate media. Talk to one person.

“My name is...”

- Avoid: Introducing yourself on your podcast, or as a radio guest host.
- Instead: The less-formal “I’m...[name.]”
When I guest-hosted The Jim Bohannon Show, I simply said “I’m Jim’s pal Holland Cooke;” and went right to what the coming hour offered the listener... rather than emphasizing who is missing from the show.
- Why: How would you introduce yourself to someone standing in front of you?

“For our friends in...”

- Avoid: Something of interest “For our friends in Westerly...”
- Instead: “If you’re in Westerly...”
- Why: Talk to people, not about them. “You” & “Your” are magic words.

“In order to...”

- Avoid: “In order to qualify...”
- Instead: “To qualify...”
- Why: “In order” brought nothing to the meeting.

“In the event that...”

- Avoid: “In the event that it rains...”
- Instead: “If it rains...”
- Why: Three fewer words.

Redundancies

“All-new”

- Avoid: “The all-new... [product]”
- Instead: “The new... [product]”
- Why: New is new. Better yet, tell me why new matters.

“Period, full-stop”

- Avoid: “Period, full-stop.” Sounds bellicose, like “I’m right and that’s that!”
- Instead: Pick one.
- Why: Saying the same thing twice doesn’t make you twice as right.

“Close proximity”

- Avoid: “Homes in close proximity to the fire...”
- Instead: “Homes near the fire...”
- Why: Two syllables beat six. And humans say “near.”

“...and much more!”

- Avoid: Adding this to embellish features listed in commercial copy.
- Instead: Delete it. 3-fewer-words will sound less-rushed. Let copy breathe.
- Why: If the “much more” matters, tell me what it is.

“Added bonus”

- Avoid: “And as an added bonus...”
- Instead: “And as a bonus...”
- Why: A bonus is already added.

“Past history”

- Avoid: “His past history shows...”
- Instead: “His history shows...”
- Why: History has already happened.

“End result”

- Avoid: “The end result was...”
- Instead: “The result was...”
- Why: A result is where you ended up.

“Personal belongings”

- Avoid: “Take your personal belongings with you.”
- Instead: “Take your belongings with you.”
- Why: Whose else would you be taking?

“Each and every”

- Avoid: “Each and every weekday...”
- Instead: “Every weekday...”
- Why: Sounds like you’re being paid by the word. Sounds mid-20th Century.

“Future plans”

- Avoid: “She’ll discuss her future plans.”
- Instead: “She’ll discuss her plans.”
- Why: Plans generally concern what hasn’t happened yet.

“Unexpected surprise”

- Avoid: “It was an unexpected surprise.”
- Instead: “It was a surprise.”
- Why: If you expected it, it wasn’t much of a surprise.

“Completely destroyed”

- Avoid: “The building was completely destroyed.”
- Instead: “The building was destroyed.”
- Why: Destroyed doesn’t leave much wiggle room.

Cliché Alert!

“At the end of the day...”

- Avoid: Sounding like everyone else is easy. That’s the problem.
- Instead: Just make the point.
- Why: Like “Period. Full Stop,” this often sounds bellicose.

“The Good, The Bad, and The Ugly”

- Avoid: when describing three-of-something.
- Instead: Think of something new.
- Why: The movie came out in 1966. Sounding more current earns you ears.

“The best ____ in town”

- Avoid: The restaurant has “the best wings in town.”
- Instead: Make me hungry.
- Why: Don’t claim the benefit. Demonstrate it. What makes them SO delicious?

“a relaxing atmosphere”

- Avoid: Generic adjectives any competitor could claim.
- Instead: Describe something I can picture, hear, taste or experience.
- Why: If ten competitors could make the same claim, it advertises none of them.

“For all your ____ needs”

- Avoid: Lazy commercial copy, i.e., “For all your automotive needs...”
- Instead: Talk about specific benefits.
- Why: “Needs” is verbal Styrofoam.

Update antique language.

- Avoid: “Radio dial,” “Rolodex,” “carbon copy,” and other dated references.
- Instead: Words listeners use now.
- Why: Vintage vocabulary undermines the currency you want to project.

Grammar and Usage

It's / Its

- Avoid: The wrong one. Homonyms aren't a problem on-air, but elsewhere...
- Instead: "It's" = "it is," a contraction. "Its" = possessive. "It's licking its paw."
- Try this: Substitute it is. If it works, apostrophe.

Imply / Infer

- Avoid: Using them interchangeably.
- Instead: Speakers imply. Listeners infer.
- Why: I imply. You infer. Different ends of the conversation.

"I could care less"

- Avoid: Because you mean the opposite.
- Instead: "I couldn't care less."
- Why: If you could care less, apparently you care.

"Switching gears"

- Avoid: Young valet parkers. Many don't know how to drive a standard shift!
- Instead: "Shifting gears..."
- Why: Gears don't switch. They shift. So the valet will park you out front, next to the Maserati.

"Out of pocket"

- Avoid: Using this phrase to mean unreachable.
- Instead: If you will be unavailable, say "out of touch."
- Why: "Out of pocket" means you've lost money, or are self-funding.

"These days"

- Avoid: Unless you're trying to sound like somebody's grandfather.
- Instead: "Lately" sounds like conversation. "These days" sounds like reminiscence.
- Why: Same meaning. And fewer words, easier on the ear.

Commonly Mispronounced Words

Erudite

- Avoid: AIR-ee-oo-dite.
- Instead: AIR-oo-dite.
- Why: Three syllables, not four. Want to sound erudite? Pronounce it correctly.

Literally

- Avoid: “LIT-trilly.”
- Instead: Give it all four syllables. “LIT-er-ally.”
- Why: Swallowing half the word doesn’t make it sound smarter.

Jewelry

- Avoid: “jew-lery.”
- Instead: “jewel-ry.”
- Why: First say jewel. Then add -ry.

Vice Versa

- Avoid: “vice-a-versa.”
- Instead: “vice versa.”
- Why: No extra a required.

Undoubtedly

- Avoid: “undoubtably.”
- Instead: “undoubtedly”
- Why: “Undoubtably” is undoubtedly wrong.

Supposedly

- Avoid: “supposably.”
- Instead: “supposedly”
- Why: “Supposably” makes whatever follows sound less credible.

Espresso

- Avoid: “expresso”
- Instead: “espresso”
- Why: It may be fast caffeine, but there’s no x in it.

et cetera

- Avoid: “ex cetera”
- Instead: “et cetera”
- Why: In Latin, “et” means “and.” “ex” means “out of, from.”

For all intents and purposes

- Avoid: “For all intensive purposes...”
- Instead: “For all intents and purposes...”
- Why: You mean every practical sense, not an especially strenuous purpose.

The “Who-Talks-Like-That?” Test

Before you open the mic -- or hit Record – ask yourself:

Would I actually say this to one person sitting across from me?

If not, rewrite it.

Because the object isn't to sound like a broadcaster.

Sound like a person who has something useful to tell me.

“But wait! There’s more!”

Other consultants’ web sites are brochures, static content about them.

HollandCooke.com is about you and your work, and I keep adding to it.

Among what you’ll find there:

Podcasting: Your #1 success factor?

44-second video explains. And hear why your technique is critical, in this 3-minute podcast.

Attention is not for sale. Buying clicks is a recipe for failure.

For less than you spend at Starbucks, my E-book can help you move from sampling to subscribing to subscribers-sharing your podcast. $4.99: Click here for instant download [PDF].

Broadcasting: The phone isn’t ringing?

It’s a common challenge for vacation fill-in talent. Often the guest-hosts are local somebodies, not career broadcasters.

For their benefit – and because even seasoned professionals always benefit from brushing-up-on the fundamentals – here are 12 tips.

The 6 Most-Dreaded Words in Sales!

These advertisers canceled...until we reworked their spots using the technique I demonstrate in this short video all reps should see.

Hungry for relevance? And revenue?

There is a National _____ Day for nearly every food you can imagine; and lots of promotion and public service opportunities.

Download my Events & Occasions Calendar, either a PDF or editable spreadsheet, so you can add local items. It’s FREE when you subscribe to my monthly newsletter, also free.

How else can I help?

To book a Zoom -- complimentary and confidential – click here.